De-Stigmatizing Diabetes Language/Care

More helpful language:

- "You have Type 2 diabetes"
 - puts the person first;
 - avoids describing the person as a disease
- "target glucose levels", "glycemic target"
 - neutral and fact-based
- "you could choose"
 - invites person to discuss any challenges or side effects of medication

Finding Hidden Salt (Sodium) & Eating Less Of It!

Did You Know?

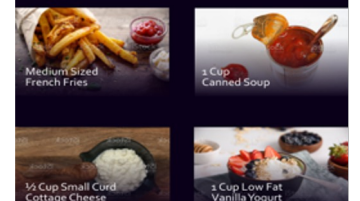

- The average American diet has 3,400 mg of sodium (salt).
- The American Heart Association recommends eating less than 2,300 mg of sodium a day.
- When you eat too much salt (sodium), your body holds on to extra water — which may increase your blood pressure.

What can you do to help prevent issues with sodium?

- Eat less than 2,300 mg of sodium a day, which may help lower your blood pressure.
- Read labels to see which foods have added preservatives (extra sodium) to make them last longer and to "enhance" taste.
- Choose fresh foods and vegetables, which often have very little or no sodium.

Which of these foods do you think has the most sodium? (tap to see the answer)
